Code of Manu

A Hindu books of sacred law written sometime during the first and second centuries B.C.

For the sake of the preservation of this entire creation, Purusha, the exceedingly resplendent one, assigned separate duties to the classes which had sprung from his mouth, arms, thighs and feet.

Teaching, studying, performing sacrificial rites, so too making other perform sacrificial rites, and giving away and receiving gifts -- these he assigned to the brahmins.

Protection of the people, giving away of wealth, performance of sacrificial rites, study and nonattachment to sensual pleasures -- these are in short, the duties of a kshatriya.

Tending of cattle, giving away of wealth, performance of sacrificial rites, study, trade and commerce, ... and agriculture -- these are the occupations of a vaishya.

The Lord has prescribed only one occupation for a shudra, namely, service without malice of ... these other three classes.

These classes later developed into the caste system:
