I have found it difficult to find good German materials and curriculum for kids. Early on we used a lot of free German worksheets and materials, but then at a certain point the kids were ready for more. Last spring I made our first set of German conversation cards. It consisted of a family tree and various family members (brother, sister, mom, dad, aunt, uncle and grandparents). We used these to practice greetings and for basic conversations asking and answering questions like What's your name? How old are you? Is this your aunt? etc. Wow! Having props absolutely transformed German for us. So this summer, I made a half-dozen more sets. The kids have made amazing progress with these already.

We use this family set every day during our conversation practice... to talk about the weather, how we're feeling, where we're from, what we're wearing, what we're up to and on and on! :)

Find out more about these here: German Conversation Cards \(die Familie\) or weather, days of the week, seasons, and finally clothing card set.

These are sold separately or together in a bundle of three.
